An aquatic exercise programme has been studied for the first time in asthmatic patients. The programme consists of an underwater weight-training regime where subjects are required to cycle up and down on a moving belt to receive a set dose of resistance on each repetition. The programme was then compared with a control group who continued with their usual regimen of exercise. No significant differences were found between the two groups for the main objective of this study, namely the maximum amount of work completed on a submaximal treadmill run. However, it was found that asthmatic patients, on average, could achieve the same submaximal exercise level as normals. Both groups displayed an increase in maximum VO2 and a reduction in the ventilatory equivalent for O2 at submaximal work loads. This study suggests that aerobic exercise can be useful for asthmatic patients. // DO NOT EDIT THIS FILE - it is machine generated -*- c++ -*- #ifndef __javax.swing.plaf.basic.BasicTabUI$5__ #define __javax.swing.plaf.basic.BasicTabUI$5__ #pragma interface #include extern "Java" { namespace javax { namespace swing { class JComponent; class JTabbedPane; class JViewport; } } } class javax::swing::plaf::basic::BasicTabUI$5 : public ::java:: 81e310abfb
